A Letter from the President

Dear Students,

As the president of this fine higher education establishment, it is my greatest pleasure to announce to you some fantastic news. Due to the shortage of faculty this previous semester, and these last few weeks, many students in need have been struggling with the lack of people available to aid them in the scholastic areas. To combat this problem, a board of committee members was selected by myself and the deans of the schools, went through a rigorous interview process to find a new team of tutors to make available to you, the student body. Five people have been selected, and will have appointments open for students starting this coming Monday.

The team is lead by Q, our new head general tutor. They, and their team, will be introduced in a ceremony open to the students who are interested in the tutoring opportunities, or concerned about their qualifications, and to faculty members waiting to welcome these five new members to our educational family. Please join me Monday, at 5:00 PM in the Calamari Lounge to officially introduce these five, and to hear them speak on the services they will be providing to you, the student body.

Object— and animal-heads; different variations of the same species?

Finally, with the weekend coming up and the Halloween holiday fast approaching, we would like to remind the students that when you go out you aren’t only representing yourselves but our dear establishment as well. Be safe, and be conscientious about your costumes and behaviors.

Thank you for your time, and have a phenomenal day on our beautiful campus,

President Hedwig Masters

Student Hit by Bus Won’t Sue School

After an unfortunate accident involving a bus, a missed brake inspection, and a lack of cross walks on campus streets, a student was left severely injured two semesters ago. Having been confined to the hospital until just two weeks ago, this student has been recovering slowly. Now, faced with large amounts of debt from both the hospital bill, and the cost of the two semesters their injuries prevented them from attending many people assumed they’d sue the school. This however, is not the case. It seems G.M. has stepped in to prevent litigation against the school he funds.
Hello students! I'm Q, and I am super excited to be joining you here at Harpoon Community College!

I've been teaching and tutoring for... a very long time, to say the least. How long doesn't really matter, does it? I love getting you as pumped to learn as I am to help you master the material. Math, writing, science of any branch—except Chemistry—all of it falls into your comprehension with my help.

I've never had a dissatisfied student, and I don't intend to start having them here, either.

Flagging grades, GPA dropping like a stone in a pond, scared for your family to ask how college is going at the next holiday party? Don't worry, I can help you out of any situation. Unless it involves chemistry. Look, I understand the stuff, but I hate it okay?

The following articles are from my new crew. Take it away!

The students in the last college I tutored at liked to make jokes about that my being a mouse head is the reason I'm good at computers, but I'd just like to point out that I'm actually a RAT-head. Completely different species, and I'm much larger than a mouse-head would be.
Alex Quail

I’m the new Physics tutor, because apparently a lot of you suck at physics.

I try not to take on lost causes, so if you have a low grade, I ask you to bring several previous tests, quizzes, or other such assignments to a meeting so I can see if there’s something I can do to help.

I do more than Physics, because really who thought only hiring ONE general tutor was a good idea. Your principal isn’t terribly bright, to be quite frank. But that’s perfectly fine. It’s fine, really, I’ll cover what Q and the other’s can’t.

I can also help in Math, environmental studies, writing, and even some art classes—but really who needs help in art class, right?

My office hours range from 3 am to 7 pm, and I like to take naps throughout the day, so if I’m asleep in my office before our meeting just wake me up.

Samantha Fizze

My name is Samantha Fizze, pronounce fish-HY. The team has taken to calling me “Something Fishy” because I was eating a tuna sandwich before my interview, but I kind of prefer just Sam. I work alongside Hayleen, and cover Biology while she focuses on Chemistry. Between the two of us, we can get almost any student through their science requirements—although some of you have to take Physics, in which case, you’ll want to go to Alex Quail. But I’ll try to help you with ANY subject. I just love helping. Hope to see lots of you come through my door, when I finally get a permanent office.

Walt Pensman-Inka

I’m Walter Pensman-Inka, and I’m your schools new tutor, specializing in the writing studies classes.

I can read over your essays, find your weak places in writing and help you exercise those skills. Come to me and you’ll come out a far better writer for it. The skills I teach you will expand beyond college, into your working years.

My husband sometimes brings our dog into see me during the day, so feel free to come over and say hello to her. She’s just an overfriendly Great Dane, who loves meeting new people. I’m trying to talk Q into letting me bring her in a few times a week, too.
Gears and Cogs; Are We Just Part of the Machine?

Students are being pressured to heavily consider applying for G.M. Industries upon graduating from the college—some say this an abuse of power by the CEO. Certain conspiracy theorists urge us to consider how this pressure is turning higher education, specifically HCC, into a true cog in the man’s machine to grind of more corporate power to their corrupt and elusive CEO.

“Who exactly is G.M.? What do those initials stand for, why won’t they show their face?” Asks outraged and frightened senior, Angelica Boxfish, “I came to HCC because the name drew me in, and the opportunity looked good. Now I’m just scared.”

This is a sentiment echoed by several other members of this student’s major—Conspiracy and Theorization.

But is there really anything for them to be worried about, or are they just letting the weight of their last year in college get to them?

Who knows, but gosh it sure is exciting to listen to them talk. For instance, I never knew how the video game industry and the electrical companies were in cahoots until I was trying to write this paper and Peter Triggin wouldn’t stop shouting about it in the background.
